HISTORIC PRESERVATION CONFERENCE

HISTORIC PRESERVATION TOOLS:

Vermont's 7th Annual Historic Preservation Conference
May 11, 2001
Brattleboro, Vermont

The Latchis Memorial Building

Visit historic downtown Brattleboro for a full day of workshops and tours focusing on the latest tools and resources available for preservation. From old barns to organ factory tours, to virtual preservation and urban open space design, workshops will offer something for everyone. Richard Moe, President of the National Trust for Historic Preservation, will start off the day with a keynote address in Brattleboro's Art Deco Latchis Theatre, bringing a national perspective to preservation in Vermont.

ABBREVIATED AGENDA: FOR COMPLETE AGENDA GO TO:

<http://www.ptvermont.org/confagend.htm>

8:15 to 9:15 Registration and Coffee: Latchis Theatre, Main Street

9:30 Keynote Address: Richard Moe, President, National Trust for Historic Preservation

As president of the National Trust for Historic Preservation, Richard Moe is responsible for directing the organization in its mission to provide leadership, education and advocacy to save the nation's diverse historic places and create more livable communities for all Americans. Chartered by Congress in 1949, the National Trust is the largest nonprofit preservation organization in the United States. Under his leadership, the National Trust has become an outspoken and effective advocate for controlling sprawl, has launched efforts to demonstrate and document the effectiveness of preservation as a tool for community revitalization, and has reaffirmed its commitment to strengthening the organized preservation movement. His remarks will focus on preservation - past, present and future.

10:45 to 12:00 Concurrent Workshops

1. Saving 10,000 Barns in Vermont

Panelists will present tips for researching the history and identifying structural problems as a first step toward barn preservation. They will discuss funding for barn projects and talk about what one Vermont community is doing to save its historic barns.

2. Virtual Preservation

Learn about the latest use of digital technology as a tool to enhance community planning, expand our cultural heritage connections, and share information. This session will feature the Orton Family Foundation's new GIS-based CommunityViz™ software, the state's new "Connect Vermont" website, and the Division for Historic Preservation's CD project for managing National and State Register information.

3. What's New?

Join us for a potpourri of recent research and current issues: Sheldon Novick will discuss the challenges of balancing varying interests in the clean-up of Elizabeth Mine, a superfund site and cultural landscape. Wendy Nicholas, Director of the Northeast office of the National Trust, will talk about the issues that led the Trust to focus on the plight of historic neighborhood schools. Michael Sherman will present an overview of a two-year research project documenting Vermont's painted theater curtains. Beth Humstone will talk about current issues and policy directing the Vermont Forum on Sprawl. Michael Oman will present a summary of ongoing research looking at British and European models for addressing heavy truck traffic in town and village centers.

12:00 to 1:15 Dutch Treat Lunch

12:15 to 2:30

4. Naulakha Tour and Picnic ($20)

Enjoy a guided tour of Rudyard Kipling's estate, a National Historic Landmark in nearby Dummerston. Transportation provided. Additional charge of $20 covers picnic lunch and transportation.

12:45 to 2:30 Tours

5. Affordable Housing Walking Tour
Tour historically significant properties that have been rehabilitated for affordable housing.

6. Brattleboro's Downtown Facade Program
A sidewalk tour of some of the downtown buildings whose facades will soon undergo restoration or rehabilitation. Local architects who are working on these buildings will discuss their designs.

7. Estey Organ Factory Tour ($10)
The Estey Organ Factory, built in 1870, is the largest collection of slate-sided buildings in the world. This tour highlights the industrial history of the factory until its closing in 1960 as well as its gradual rehabilitation for mixed use through public-private partnerships. The tour also showcases a great window rehabilitation project.

8. Brattleboro Retreat Farm ($10)
For years, the Brattleboro Retreat Farm was integral to patient care while at the same time serving as a park-like natural area for the Brattleboro community. This tour will highlight the extraordinary effort to save the farm as a working farm and community space.

1:15 to 2:30 Concurrent Workshops

9. Urban Open Space Workshop
Review the design tools that make a downtown open space successful. Participate in a mini-charette to explore different alternatives for a site that's been vacated by a franchise in downtown Brattleboro. This workshop will begin at 12:45 to maximize creative time. Space is limited so register early!

10. You Can Do It: Getting the Job Done!
You're ready to start a construction project... now what? This session will guide organizations through the process of prioritizing and determining a scope of work, writing a work description, finding sources for bid specifications, selecting a contractor, providing contract management and project oversight.

11. Community Action, Community Ownership
This session will highlight ways that local public and private investment has worked to strengthen community centers, from charitable investment to limited liability corporations.

2:45 to 4:00 Concurrent Workshops

12. Preservation for Homeowners
Join our panel of experts to discuss technical issues regarding historic preservation in your building. Amy Johnston, an historic preservation project manager will be joined by architect, Denny Frehsee of Williams and Frehsee and contractor, John Jessup for brief comments followed by a question and answer period.

13. What's New in Codes for Old Buildings?
 What's new in the rapidly developing field of historic buildings codes? Find out about the just published NFPA 914 that offers new national model code language. Hear about how Vermont's code compares to New Jersey and other states. Pick up your copy of the new Field Guide section on accessibility solutions for historic buildings and see slides of successful examples.

14. Funders Panel
 Behind every successful preservation project is a generous source of financial support. This session will feature a panel of experts from some of Vermont's most dedicated funding sources.

4:00 to 5:00 Reception: Robert H. Gibson River Garden, Main Street

Shrewsbury, Marjorie Pierce's House and Store

In 1997, Marjorie Pierce gave her house and store to PTV, with the hope that the store, closed in '93, would eventually be reopened. She retained life tenancy. In February, Marjorie died at age 97. As part of a process to plan for the best use of the property, PTV hosted a gathering of neighbors to talk about PTV's understanding of Marjorie's wishes and to gather community input.

Waterbury, Railroad Station Restoration Project

Waterbury Railroad Station has been in use as a train station since it was built in 1875 and is slated for rehabilitation by Waterbury Revitalization, Inc. Complete restoration and rehabilitation of the station for multiple commercial uses (including continued use as an Amtrak station), is estimated to cost $1,434,913. Phase One work, intended to stabilize and restore the most significant historic elements including interim rehabilitation measures is estimated to cost $381,874. The project was awarded a Transportation Enhancement Activities grant of $369,560

South Royalton, South Royalton Co-op

A group from South Royalton and Tunbridge have been exploring the possibility of forming a co-op grocery store in So. Royalton. The town has been without a grocery store since 1997, and area residents have to drive ½ hour or more to Lebanon to shop. Kate Fellows, a member of the ad-hoc committee, has been busy in the community trying to get the project off the ground.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Ireland Bans Superstores

The Irish government has made permanent a temporary cap on the size of retail stores in effect since 1998. The new law restricts stores in the Dublin area to 3,500 square meters (38,000 sq. ft.) and applies a 3,000 square meter (32,000 sq. ft.) limit to the rest of the country.

The policy also requires that new retail stores be located in town centers. If no sites are available, and the development is deemed necessary by local authorities, then it may be located on the edge of the town center (defined as within "convenient walking distance of the primary shopping area of the town centre"). Out-of-town retail developments are strongly discouraged.

The policy was issued by the Ministry for the Environment and Local Government. Its purpose is to foster sustainable development, maintain competition, ensure that retail outlets are readily accessible by public transit, and protect the viability of town centers.

The policy applies to grocery stores and "hypermarkets," which, like U.S. supercenters, sell both food and general merchandise. Non-food warehouse stores, such as do-it-yourself home centers, are restricted to 6,000 square meters under existing law.

Unlike the U.S., where land use is strictly a state and local matter, Irish planning policy is determined at both the national and local level. The national government establishes broad policies and guidelines, which are implemented through plans developed by local governments.

The policy outlines the importance of town centers as focal points for community and civic activities, and notes that these functions cannot be replicated by shopping malls. Moreover, the long-term viability of town centers depends on maintaining their commercial base. "Where new developments compromise [downtown vitality], they should be rejected," the policy states.

The policy also stipulates that local governments should enact zoning policies that safeguard local shops, provided that they substantiate the importance of such stores to the community.

In preparing the policy, the government commissioned a study by Goodbody Economic Consultants, who concluded that "available evidence suggests that economies of scale are exhausted at a store size of approximately 2,000 [square meters]."

Developers and chain retailers lobbied intensely for an easing of the size cap in the months leading up to the Ministry's final decision. They were joined in their opposition by the Irish Competition Authority, which contends that larger stores would reduce prices.

Studies, however, have found that grocery prices in the Republic are 5 percent lower than in England and Northern Ireland, which have few restrictions on large-scale chains. Indeed, the Irish grocery market is robustly competitive compared to most of its heavily consolidated European neighbors. Independent grocers enjoy a 45 percent market share in Ireland, up 10 percent in the last decade. By comparison, independents have only 8 percent of the English market.

Limiting the size and location of new retail stores has become increasingly common as communities look for ways to maintain their character and local economies. Dozens of U.S. cities have enacted size caps. Many countries have them as well, including Norway, France, Denmark, and Argentina.
